Is the fate of Governor Edward I. Edwards, west of the wet candidates at the Democratic National convention indicative of what Frank W. Agan, west of the wet candidates for the governorship of Vermont, can expect at the hands of the voters of the state of Vermont?—Rutland News.

There is a mystery lurking in the above paragraph. Who are the wet candidates for governor besides Agan?

An editorial clipped from the New York World and headed, "God or Gary?" is worthy of careful perusal as giving a new light on the reason for the failure of the Inter Church Movement to attain the success predicted for it. If there is any truth whatever in the statements made here, the movement is bound to come back stronger than ever, and there is already signs of a movement to take up the burden of the Inter Church work, before that movement is scarcely dead. The idea of a united Protestantism will not down.

Many a citizen is just now receiving his tax notice and in most instances grumbles at the amount he is called upon to pay toward the support of his government. This is true whether one lives in Jay or in Burlington. Taxes are high. But whatever protest one hears about taxes is as a rule a protest against what is thought to be inequalities of valuations, or the unwise or extravagant expenditure of the people's money, and not the fact merely that the tax rate is high. People willingly tax themselves, want reasonable improvements in their schools and roads and generally recognize the need and justice of high tax rates. "Value received" at the going value of the dollar is all the average citizen expects of his tax money and officers should see to it that he gets that. Taxes, like food and clothing, are a necessary thing and when one is high the others are bound to be equally high. What Vermont needs is not a less tax rate, but a more uniform method of valuation for taxation purposes, and a more unified and scientific method of spending that money.

Congressman Dale is in Orleans county renewing acquaintances and talking over the political situation, especially in regard to his own district and his own ambition to be returned to Washington. Mr. Dale finds the situation in the district much better than he had feared with three men after his place. Porter Dale does not pretend to be a superman, but he has always impressed this paper as a man who studied legislation and worked hard in Washington, as a man who conscientiously used his influence and vote for those things which he believed to be right and best for the people, regardless of how his action will be taken by the voters as effecting his political future. Mr. Dale is a poor advertiser. His rather unusually good committee appointments and his steady progress as a recognized member of the House of Representatives has given ample opportunity for Mr. Dale to "blow his own horn." But that is not Dale. He will sit down and tell you quietly in response to questions about legislation and politics in Washington and the whys and wherefores of his action upon any and every measure in which you may be interested. We cannot see where anything whatever is to be gained by swapping a known man of good quality for some uncertainty. His opponents are all men of more or less radical types, or single issue men. Trainor is known only for his wetness from top to toe. Gibson is a somewhat spectacular type who not long ago bolted the party he now asks help from. Gordon is known to be closely associated with labor and if correctly recalled sought honors from the Democrats a few years back. In ability perhaps none of the four men greatly over top the others, but Dale, with the experience and position already gained and with his conservative, though not reactionary inclination, must more nearly represent the second district of Vermont than any of the other three men who seek to take Mr. Dale's seat away from him. Let us return Mr. Dale to Congress.

Must Concentrate upon Emery.

(Morrisville Messenger)

From all that we can learn from the newspapers; from those traveling over the state; from leading farmers and others in the field, we find that the opinion is growing that the only way to beat Mr. Agan is to concentrate upon Mr. Emery.

More and more it is being realized that these two men stand for opposite principles.

Mr. Agan stands for "Personal Liberty," and the repeal of the Volstead act.

Mr. Emery stands for the conservative, temperance sentiment of Vermont.

Should Mr. Agan win, and it looks dangerously probable now that he may win, it means that the liquor interests will make great use of it in forcing the repeal of the Volstead act and the passage of a new and very liberal act, defining what intoxicating liquor is under the Prohibition Amendment. Those interests want it defined to permit the manufacture of light wines and beer of less than five per cent alcohol content.

If rock ribbed, intelligent, conservative Vermont names Mr. Agan it will be notice to congress to do just this.

Mr. Emery stands for the retention of the Volstead law, modified slightly by striking out certain parts thereof by the liquor interests, for the express purpose of making the act obnoxious and to so secure its repeal.

All four men are good business men and would make good governors. There is little choice between them, as men or as executives.

But there is everything in what two of them stand for.

Which do you favor?

God or Gary?

(New York World.)

The Interchurch Movement, whose ambitious plans seem to have gone awry, contemplated social no less than religious activities on an enlarged scale. To this end an elaborate organization was effected and the Industrial Relations Department, without waiting the result of the big drive set for last April, began a survey of conditions in the steel industry. The operations of these investigators and the report which they have known to have prepared seem to have been accountable to a degree for the failure of the money-making enterprise.

When the Interchurch Commission was found to be in sympathy with the steel strikers to the extent of endorsing their demand for collective bargaining, an Ohio organ of the Manufacturers' Association denounced the movement as "anarchistic." Later on, when it was discovered that the report was to take a sympathetic view of the claims of the working men in the Pittsburgh district, many wealthy churchmen and possible contributors were suddenly convinced that the Interchurch Movement was devoting too much attention to human welfare and not enough to true religion as understood in Wall street. Thereupon subscriptions fell off or were tantalizingly withheld and a powerful effort was instituted to prevent the publication of the report.

The World now learns that this sort of influence has been defeated and that the Interchurch committee is soon to issue the document. What else could it do in honor and in faith? The issue has been sharply drawn between mammon and religion. Big business has challenged the church, and unless the church is to retire discredited it must hold its ground. If it is to draw its inspiration from the Man of Galilee it cannot capitulate to Albert H. Gary.

For the Interchurch Movement, failure in such circumstances can be only temporary. Profiting by mistakes now understood, one of them being an undue infusion of commercialism into its councils, there is no reason why with right standards the cause should not ultimately be carried to complete success.

Vermont's Improving Roads.

(Bennington Banner)

Nearly two thousand miles by motor since the first of May, over Vermont highways, discloses many things of interest. First and foremost is that Vermont roads are continually being improved, they are better now than they were last year and much better than a few years back.

Vermont is at last on the right track in road building—stone foundation and hard surface roads where traffic is heavy and well drained dirt and gravel where traffic is light. In fair weather Vermont probably has the best average of roads of any state in the union, taking into consideration the side roads as well as the main highways. Certainly they are better than those of New York state and New Hampshire and equal to those of Massachusetts.

Road improvement in Vermont depends almost entirely on the sense shown by the individual towns in selecting and keeping competent highway commissioners. The ordinary dirt almost anywhere in Vermont makes a good light traffic summer road if properly drained and dragged.

On the main trunk line up through Bennington county the best road is the section through East Rupert because there is a commissioner or patrolman who knows how to use a drag. He doesn't wait for the road to get dry after a rain but is out with his drag just as soon as the rain slackens. It is a pity that more road men do not learn this lesson. A road machine is useful in its place but it will never take the place of a road drag.

The roads of eastern Vermont average a little better than those of western Vermont though there are some stretches on this side of the state that are not excelled. The northeastern counties average rather better than the rest of the state in their main roads but their side roads are not as good as those in the southern counties.

The mountain passes are better this year than ever before, except after a rainstorm. The best grade is the pass at Wallingford. The best road is at Mendon or Peru, though the best stretch of mountain road in the state is in Searsburg. Going east the climb from Bennington or Rutland is easier than that from Manchester or Londonderry to the north or southern passes. The Brandon-Rochester pass via Granville and the Mad river valley is scenically one of the most attractive highways in Vermont.

In Stoddard E. Bates the state has a thoroughly able, competent and efficient commissioner. He gets some abuse from persons who have tried to work him and failed, but goes steadily about his business and under his management the state is making greater progress in road construction than ever before. He has a splendid assistant in the person of H. M. McIntosh, state engineer. They are fearfully hampered by the shortage of labor and the high price of everything and in the federal aid projects they have to conform to rules laid down at Washington which do not in all cases conform to Vermont requirements. People are sometimes inclined to blame the commissioner for conditions over which he has no control.

The truck problem is a serious matter. They ruin roads in wet weather and cause more expense than any other one thing. At the same time people are nowadays dependent in no small degree on truck transportation. Short haul of the essentials of life is almost all by truck and the use of trucks is constantly increasing.

In the thickly settled districts it will probably be necessary to build cement roads for truck traffic and then to confine the trucks as far as possible to roads which will stand the strain.

The worst roads in the state are in the cities and villages where the roads are nearly all below par. These larger communities have not yet conquered the road problem, but Bennington, Manchester and some others are making a heroic effort which all the state hopes will show the way.
